"This is a great opportunity to connect with our alumni and friends who want to stay connected with us as we get the ball rolling with a new campus," White said in a release. "I think students will love this new campus since it's so vibrant and connected with the city. "I'm excited for our future because students love it at University of Tulsa and they continue to grow. It's like a new home for them and they feel at home, which is really important. It's a community where everybody is welcome." The new campus is expected to be located in the upper-class section of Northeast Tulsa, about four miles west of the current location. A $30 million residential development project, the Northpointe neighborhood will be north of 74th Street and Page Avenue, just west of the Tulsa County-Tulsa Public School District boundary. The school will offer bachelor's degrees in science and arts, as well as master's degrees. The campus will also give students the opportunity to pursue a Ph.D. in a field of their choice, as well as joint degrees. The city of Tulsa will have final approval before the school can move forward, and members of White's planning committee will be named. The University of Tulsa also will be part of the planning process. "We're excited to be exploring this idea," White said. "We're going to work with our campus master plan team and faculty to see how we can maximize the campus potential. This is something that we just don't have enough information about. With student growth, we want to prepare for that. The city is cooperating, so we're working with them, too, to understand what their desires are." "We'll be looking at parks and green space in Northeast and North Tulsa, so how can we make that an attractive community and make this a place where people want to live?" White said. "There are so many things we can do. It can be innovative." While White has begun looking at the site, he has no timeline on when she'll submit an official proposal to the state. She'd like to have a construction site in place by next August. "It's a lot more of a multiyear effort," she said. "There are a lot of things we have to work out before the site is chosen." "It is common practice for the university to contact city officials and other community stakeholders," said Russ Ferrell, director of the Tulsa City
